Matthew J. Jalazo, Psy.D. is a licensed psychologist who has practiced forensic psychology on a full-time basis for the last fifteen years (including four years as a psychologist in the United States Army). He earned his doctoral degree in clinical psychology from Nova Southeastern University (with a concentration in forensic psychology), completed his predoctoral internship at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, and his postdoctoral fellowship in forensic psychology at Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh, North Carolina.

Dr. Jalazo has a wealth of experience in assessing the impact of numerous organic and psychiatric conditions on behavior that brings individuals into contact with the criminal justice system. He has conducted thousands of evaluations in inpatient, correctional and outpatient settings that have encompassed a wide range of psycholegal questions including criminal and civil competencies, risk assessment, criminal responsibility, death penalty mitigation, downward departure, fitness for duty, and short and long-term disability, and has testified on several hundred occasions in state court. He has co-authored publications and given presentations in other areas of interest, including posttraumatic stress disorder and neuropsychology.